The Rubric's Title

Key 1
- This is an entry with a key. The key is displayed on the left, and you're reading the entry's contents. As you can see, this entry does not belong to a subrubric.

A First Subrubric

Key 2
- This entry belongs to the first subrubric. Before the subrubric, some space is added to separate it from the previous entry.
- After the subrubric, some space is also added to separate it from the first entry. Note that this entry has no key. The entries contents are aligned together.

  This is a piece of text produced by the \text macro. It spawns the whole text width. If you want to further separate it from the normal entries with vertical space (like here), you can use the \par command.

Key 3
- This is another entry with a new key.
- This is another entry, but this one has no key. Note the text bullet which serves as a visual clue, especially when several entries share the same key.

A Second Subrubric

Key 1
- This entry belongs to the second subrubric.
- This one also belongs to the second subrubric.

Key 2
- This is another entry with a new key.
- This is another entry, but this one has no key.

Key 3
- If you want to separate some entries from the subrubric above, you can for instance make an empty subrubric.
- You can include other rubrics below. Rubrics can even be split across pages. The titles will then be repeated.
